By Victor I. Streeter. F. A. Davis. New York: John Wiley and Son Ltd. 1917. xvii + 272 p. ABSTRACT This book is based on the author's investigation of the application of the "principle of thermal analysis" to the problems of analysis of chemical compounds, and its description is made in a plain and popular manner. Part I treats of the heat of formation of chemical compounds. Part II treats of the heat of decomposition of chemical compounds. Part III is a compendium of observations relating to the law of the conservation of energy. Part IV treats of the thermodynamics of acids and bases. Part V treats of the theory of electrical dissociation. Part VI treats of the concepts of chemical kinetics. Part VII treats of the energy of chemical reactions. Part VIII treats of the heat of solution of chemical compounds. The book is profusely illustrated with chemical formulae, spectra, graphs, tables, and

The Upper House, i. e. the Senate, the House of Commons and the Supreme Court, voted by a majority of 34 to 16 to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada the decision of the Canadian High Court of Justice that certain provisions of the Parliament. Boundaries Act, 1923, are unconstitutional. This appeal comes too late to save a Canadian the burden of a trial which must be begun before the end of this month. The Proposal To Pay a Reward for the Capture of the Bandit. Ottawa, Dec. 20. The Government has decided that a reward will be paid for the capture of the bank bandit who was captured this morning in the town of Mattawa. The Government, through the minister of finance, has promised that if the bandit turns state's evidence he
